

Noted economist to discuss Habitat for Humanity of the Chesapeake economic impact study

Posted by Jennifer Batten

January 23, 2011

Anirban Basu, Chairman & Chief Executive Officer of Sage Policy Group, Inc., will present an economic impact study showcasing Habitat for Humanity of the Chesapeake (HFHC)'s contributions to the communities it serves in Anne Arundel and Baltimore on Feb. 1 and 2.

During these breakfast briefings, Basu will explain how HFHC benefits its service areas through "recycling" the contributions it receives from businesses, government entities and individual donors. Additionally, impacting the region by providing employment, generating property tax revenue and improving the neighborhoods in the area's they build.

The first briefing will be held at the board room of the Greater Baltimore Committee in Baltimore on Feb. 1 from 7:30 a.m.-9 a.m. and Feb. 2 at the same time in Annapolis at BankAnnapolis on Bestgate Road.

"I am certain this presentation by Mr. Basu will ensure that those who invest in Habitat for Humanity of the Chesapeake will discover that they are making a tangible commitment to their community," HFHC CEO Mike Mitchell said in a press release. "They are making a real measurable return on their financial contributions which is ultimately more of an economic investment than a donation."